

Registration of the Jews in Zaslav for the Purpose of Taxes, 1764 [showing name of the village where came from]; Krakow: Archiwum Panstwowe, Miasta Krakowa i Moj. Krakowskego. Zespol Archiwum angushkow. nr: mikr: 101698, sign. 1023/82 D. ("Town of Zaslavl, 1764, list of residents")

SOME NOTES ON THE RESEARCH RESULTS

Early Zaslav history indicates Polish rule. This explains the Polish spelling of names in the list below.

Iziaslav (Zaslav) [Iz'jaslav]. Map: III-7. (Photo: View of Izaislav.) Town (1981 pop 14,300) and raion center in Khmelnytskyi oblast, situated in southeastern Volhynia. Founded in 987, from the 14th century it belonged to the Ostrozky family of princes, from the 16th century to the Zasławski family of princes, and from 1673 to the Sanguszko family of princes. In 1754 it was granted the rights of Magdeburg law. Under Russian rule it was a vicegerency capital (1793–5) and a county town in Volhynia gubernia (1796–1917). Among its architectural monuments are a castle and a Roman Catholic cathedral from the 16th century; the city walls, with a gate and towers; and a palace from the 17th century.

Zasławski. A family line of Ukrainian nobles that had a common origin with the Ostrozky family in the person of Vasyl Fedorovych (d 1461). His older son, Yurii (Heorhii), inherited the town of Iziaslav (Zaslav), in Volhynia, and adopted the name Zasławski; his younger son, Ivan, inherited the town of Ostrih. The Zasławski family owned large tracts of land in Volhynia, Podilia, and the Bratslav region. Other notable family figures included Janusz Zasławski, the voivode of Podlachia (1591) and Volhynia (1604, 1620), his son Oleksander (d 1629), who was a Volhynian palatine (1605) and a voivode of Bratslav (from 1615) and Kyiv (from 1628); and Oleksander's son, Władysław-Dominik Zasławski. The family line died out with Władysław-Dominik's son, Oleksander, in 1673, and its fortunes went to the Lubomirski family.

Subject: Re: Zaslav

These are names of the villages their came from. Unfortunately the archives doesn't make copies of microfilms.

There is a list of the Jews from Zaslav 1766 also. Some people have surnames.

There is a second list from the same year but done by number of houses with the number of the family members.
